The Grant house is of weatherboarded log and frame construction. The middle section is of two stormys, three bays, and is flanked, on the east, by a three bay 12 storey wing, and on the west, by a three bay two storey wing. Shed-roofed additions behind all sections create a long sweeping rear roofline.

The east wing, and the first storey of the middle section, are said to be of log construction. The west wing, and extensive alterations to the fenestration and the interiors of the earlier sections, all date from within the last decade, designed by VanFossen Schwab, Architect, Baltimore, Maryland.

The interiors are of a distinguished but quiet, contemporary flavor, compatible with the age of the basic structure.

A photograph, showing the house prior to the last additions, indicates that a door was approximately centered in each of the two earlier sections. The south front wall of the east wing is aligned several inches behind the south front wall of the middle section. A chimney (still) rises through the roof ridge of the middle section, near, but entirely within, its east end.

Internally, the middle section is one large room. A winding stair formerly occupied the space north of the chimney, but is now removed. A door south of the chimney connected the middle section with the east wing, now climinated. The large fireplace remains on the east side of this section.

A beaded board partition divided the east wing into two rooms; the one next to the chimney was two bays in width, and included the south front door. It has a large stone fireplace within the above described chimney. Accessible from this room, but within the smaller room, at the north end of the partition, was an enclosed winding stair. The lower portion of the stair has been rebuilt straight, and the partitioning, south of the stair, has been removed. Part of the architrave around a door in the partition, survives in situ. A small door to the closet beneath the stair is of ledge construction, and retains its clinched rose-headed wrought nails.

In the attic of the middle section, old log joists have been reused, out of context, as floor joists. The chimney rises several feet above the attic floor, in stone, with a projecting course of stone several inches below the actual top forming a cap motif. The chimney has been extended in brick through the existing late 19th or early 20th century roof construction.

The attic of the east wing was not accessible for viewing.

No determination could be made as to which section came first, due to the extensive alterations.

Accepted historical references to a house on this property date from ca. 1814. Visible evidence neither confirms nor denys that the remaining structure is the one referred to in ca. 1814. Evidence described does indicate that at least part of this structure dates from at least the early 19th century. The middle section is about 18:-9" wide; without its rear additions, it was about 18 feet deep; it is now about 30 feet deep. The east wing is about 20 feet wide; it was about 18 feet deep, and is now about 30 feet deep.
